Jamie Lee

The National Archives of Singapore

Jamie Lee is an assistant archivist at the Audio-Visual Archives Department, National Archives of Singapore.

A lifelong advocate for the moving image, she aims to connect Singaporeans with their rich audiovisual heritage, by improving access to—and discoverability of—NAS's rich collection of audiovisual materials.

Specifically, this includes the curation of audiovisual records for exhibitions, programmes, and other forms of media—in this regard, she explores known and unknown relationships between records to weave meaningful narratives for public enjoyment and education. In improving access to NAS's collections, she adopts a holistic approach, seeking to establish connections on a more granular level as well, in the form of Linked Data.

Jamie has also contributed articles to the Asian Film Archive and Singapore International Film Festival. She is currently completing her MLIS with a specialization in Archival Studies at the University of Wisconsin—Milwaukee.
