

Biography

Bertrand Lavédrine

Bertrand Lavédrine is a professor at the Muséum national d'Histoire naturelle and a conservation scientist at the Centre de recherche sur la conservation in Paris, France. In 2022, he was appointed as Judith Praska Distinguished Visiting Professor in Conservation & Technical Studies at New York University. From 1998 to 2019, he was the director of Centre de recherche sur la conservation and was head of the Conservation training program at the Sorbonne University from 2002 to 2007. He has written papers and books on the preservation of photographic collections, now available in several languages (French, English, Spanish, Russian, Japanese and Vietnamese). He has participated in various international training programs funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, the Getty Conservation Institute or Iccrom and research projects funded by the European commission.